The Smothers Brothers Show

If you accept the premise that once upon a time there were two brothers, and one brother died and went to heaven and now comes down to earth each week as a probationary angel who has to do good—well enough, that is, to get his wings and become a real angel—as we say, if you accept it all, you can have a very good time with this show. If, however, you can't accept it and are on the side not of the angels but the angles, and you even regard the whole thing as a rather "B" switch on Bewitched—you won't have a good time. Frankly, we have varied back and forth. We have seen one episode which was so good we would have accepted the fact that the producer was an angel. On the other hand, we have also seen another one which was so bad we wouldn't have accepted the fact that there were, are, or even ever have been, two brothers named Smothers.

Actually, as you probably know by now, the whole show has itself varied. In fact it has changed, under different producers, from the funny-funny to the character-funny, and it is now much better. Not that there are not hangovers from the old daze, particularly in angel-brother Tom's telephone calls to his angel-in-chief, Ralph—e.g., when he takes the telephone off his chest, and says inevitably, "I've got to get something off my chest"; or when he says, "Roger and over," and then asks, "I wonder who 'Over' is—I know who Roger is." But, despite these hangovers, the show is now developing some very funny character funnies—as, for instance, in the recent Christmas show when the brothers did an inimitable "There isn't any Kriss Kringle" routine. And we also liked Tom's inventive tongue twisters like "He's out in the sneet and slow" and "You've filled those toy barrels better than they've ever been fore befilled."

Since they've done so much to improve this show, we are going to ask them to do one more thing—and that is to improve the beginning. For, however you feel about The Smothers Brothers Show, one thing is certain, the beginning is the dead end of it. The opening song is bad enough ("There're miracles to start. . . . But they always come apart . . ." etc., etc.), but then the brothers come on to tell us what's going to happen. Honestly, it takes strength to handle it when you don't know, but when you do—well, never mind. On one show we saw, Tom said, "No, I can't say that very well," and Dick said, "No, you can't say that very well," and then Tom said, "I thought I said it very well." Really, after a siege like that, you could hardly wait for the first commercial.

All in all, we think this program, like Tom himself, is still probationary. What it needs now is to do not only good, but better.

as we see it

■ Two recent news stories suggest that before long the networks will be devoting less of their evening time exclusively to light entertainment.

One of the stories, in Variety, used Nielsen figures to report:

■ "In the peak half hour of from 9 to 9:30 P.M., there are 1,710,000 fewer men in the age group from 35 to 49 watching TV in the U.S. this season than there were for the same time period last season. Again in the same time period, there are 1,780,000 fewer women in the same age group watching TV this season. . . ."

The weekly show-business paper said the loss wasn't too significant because it was offset by an increase of audience in the lower age groups, and besides there still were enough viewers in the 35-49 group to attract advertisers. Still, and this is us talking, not Variety, something is making folks in the 35-49 age group turn off their sets.

■ The other item, in The New York Times, reported that General Telephone and Electronics has bought 10 news-documentaries on CBS more or less alternating with IBM specials on Tuesday evenings in prime time.

The paper quoted George Norton, advertising vice president of the company, as saying, "Our research shows that news-documentary programs reach 27 percent more professional and white-collar people than entertainment programs, 44 percent more people with one or more years of college, 21 percent more in the upper-income group."

■ These figures, and the ominous Nielsen figures about audience loss in a most important age group, undoubtedly are being studied by the networks. We hope.

THE QUEEN GOES WEST

Barbara Stanwyck, star, holds court on the set of
'The Big Valley'

BY DWIGHT WHITNEY

The ancient heat blowers wheeze fitfully. The air is bone cold on Stage 11 at CBS Studio Center where ABC's The Big Valley is shot. But not too cold for Missy. "I'm a tough old dame from Brooklyn. Don't try to make me into something I'm not," she has told her producers a dozen times. "If you want someone to tiptoe down the Barkley staircase in crinoline and politely ask where the cattle went, get another girl. That's not me."

She's "Missy"! "Stanny"! "The Queen"! Miss No-Nonsense herself who never tiptoes anywhere, who hates small talk and distrusts strangers. She's Barbara Stanwyck, a legend at 58, once plain Ruby Stevens, orphaned child of a ne'er-do-well Brooklyn bricklayer; the back lot's feisty Irish darling who came up from the chorus line to show the world how a real professional does it. She wraps her mink tightly around her still-slim figure, fixes her steely blue eyes on the scene before her, tosses what the press releases describe as her "mercury-silver" hair, and lays down the law according to Stanwyck:

"All right, Pablum, let's get on with it. I want my boys out of here by noon Friday!" And then, in an aside to her visitor, "And don't call it mercury silver. It's gray."

One of her "boys," the second assistant director, whispers knowingly, "You know we're not gettin' out by noon. Missy ain't workin' Friday."

"Pablum" is The Queen's name for the Harvard-educated young director, Michael Ritchie, 27, poised and precocious. The scene has Dick Long, the former juvenile who in 20 years has become a kind of road-company Gig Young, and Jill St. John, Valley's generously constructed guest star.

Missy is not even in the scene. But she rules it. She rules everything and everyone. She rules the grips, the gaffers, the guest stars, her co-stars, the directors, the camera operators, the wardrobe people, the sound men.

Next week's director, Virgil Vogel, a dark, wavy-haired man with a Chaplinesque mustache, is hovering around now, playing The Queen's game. She is enthroned on a high director's chair, lovingly labeled "Missy" in green letters by the property men.

Vogel leans forward solicitously, filling her in on the rewrite of next week's script. She nods as he talks. "I'll have the changes here in five minutes," he says.

"Who did they get for the girl, Virgil?" she asks at last. He mentions a well-known actress. Before she can answer, Long blows a line. "That's my Richard!" cries The Queen.

Long slides over and puts his arm around The Queen, an almost automatic action. He plays it very suave with Missy-baby. The Queen likes it.

"What show is this anyway, Dick?" "Twenty-two."

"Feels more like 92."

Missy doesn't miss much. Not the lenses cinematographer Will Cline is using; not the movements of her long-time companion and dresser, sphinx-like Harriett Coray, as much a part of a Stanwyck picture as the set itself; certainly not the plunge in Miss St. John's neckline.

Charles Briles, who plays a college student, is telling Tonto-and-the-Lone-Ranger jokes.

Lee Majors, the downy-cheeked Heath, is on the phone to his girl. Peter Breck ("I'm known as Instant Mouth around here") is in his dressing room. Breck, who used to star in Black Saddle, has simmered down some since last summer, when The Queen irked him by openly favoring Majors, an "animally magnetic" kid from Kentucky who just barely knew which was the camera's business end. Linda Evans, who, everyone agrees, "knows what she's doing," has a ready-to-do-your-bidding look. Miss St. John sits alone—The Queen tends to frighten younger actresses.

The Queen, who once told Gloria Swanson, "I know where my place is. At your feet." The Queen, who loves actors as long as they can talk about acting. The Queen, who is really married to the script—something much more dependable than a man ("I have had that," The Queen says).

The Queen, for whom an 8:30 shooting call means 8:30. The Queen, who eats steak three times a day. The Queen, who knows the whole script, not just today's part of it. The Queen, who doesn't mind telling anybody, "I don't want to be Lillian Gish and spout platitudes. Don't give me things to say; give me things to do."

The Queen, who has had four Oscar nominations but never had an Oscar. The Queen, whose gifts to her "boys" over 35 years might put a bulge in Tiffany's warehouse!

An old-timer sidles up, 43 years a grip, chomping on a wet cigar end, hat jammed down over a toothless smile. Out come the reminiscences, out come the family pictures, out come the memories of a certain mutual friend—"Member, Missy? When he was sick, you sent him to Arizona. You were taking care of him." The Queen smiles the smile of a woman who knows where her strength lies. The old-timer leans forward, dropping his voice. "Missy?" "Yes?"

"Haven't touched a drop in three years." "Good, I'm glad."

The little visits never end and, miraculously, they never cloy. Her manner is warm, easy, far removed from the stiffly formal, rather shy woman who has always held herself aloof from the mainstream of Hollywood life. Who is this woman, The Queen? She is a pleasant anachronism, an old-fashioned genus Movie Star with a twist.

lack of one. She lives simply in a three-bedroom Cape Cod house just off Sunset Boulevard in Beverly Hills hung with unhip paintings, many of clowns, mixed in with an occasional impressionist. Now that "Uncle" Buck Mack, the old-time vaudevillian she supported in his dotage as a kind of walking reminder of the days when she, too, hoofed, is dead, she lives alone. She owns no European sports car. On days off she goes to the movies, sometimes spending the day at it.

Bored by Hollywood society

Hollywood social life bores her. Her friends tend to be the same from year to year—Nancy Sinatra Sr., the Jack Bennys, a Detroit newspaper columnist named Shirley Eder, a dress designer named Nolan Miller, her press agent, Helen Ferguson, who used to be a Movie Queen (of the silents) herself. She gives "intimate" parties, frequently augmented with what has been described as "all the rags and tags left over. Missy loves birds with broken wings."

One writer, now an influential producer, remembers how she picked him up in his less opulent days, took him out to her house, rewrote the script for him, coached him in how to talk turkey to the big wheels, then plumped for him around town.

"You'd have thought I was Paddy Chayefsky," he remembers. "She builds a huge protective cult around her made up of people who love and adore her. She pushed Bill Holden, she pushed Kirk Douglas, she pushed Bob Wagner—and Lee Majors. Then Majors got over his fright and didn't need her so much any more. Her interest flagged."

She does this, some friends believe, as a kind of emotional cushion against her fear that even now the bubble may burst. Yet even this fear she managed to weave into the legend. She once told a TV director whom she knew only professionally, "I go home at night and wait for the producer to call and tell me I've been replaced." The director's reaction was just what she meant it to be: "That's our Stanny. Always on. But I love it."

Only partly "on." Show business's most celebrated orphan has more than Irene suits in her closet. The bravura hides a passel of doubts, plenty of self-denigration and an iron will for survival. Also some skeletons.

Some of these she likes to talk about—because they fit the image: how, when her mother died when she was 2, her father drifted away; how at 4 she began "boarding out" with whoever would have her, catching Pearl White movies whenever she could scrounge the price, finally ending up a tagalong after her sister Mildred, a hoofer in the Prohibition era; how she herself danced at the Silver Slipper and on the Strand Roof when barely in her teens; and how she finally made it big in the 1927 play "Burlesque"—big because she was heroine Bonny Johnson, the true-blue little chorus-girl wife of a philandering burlesque comic, faithful to him to the bitter end.

Other things she would rather not discuss—they don't fit "the image." Her stormy marriage to the late comedian Frank Fay (who, like the hero of "Burlesque," also drank). She adored him shamelessly. He was an established Broadway musical-comedy star 10 years older than she was. They came to Hollywood together in the late Twenties. His personality was bullish; hers stiffly defensive enough to appear surly.

She alienated the rising young director, Frank Capra, at her first interview because she feared he didn't like her. Capra nevertheless cast her in "Ladies of Leisure," explaining, "If I'm against a girl and she can still reach me, she's got a power I want."

In the end she fought Fay like a hellcat, though she still loved him. In 1932 they adopted an infant son, Dion Anthony Fay, over whom they were later to fight a bitter two-year custody battle. During the separation, Fay complained she kept Tony from him. Yet during the same separation she had written Fay, "... I love you as much as it is possible for a woman to love a man."

Then came Robert Taylor

Later she married—and divorced—that handsome Gentleman of the Old School, Robert Taylor. He couldn't fulfill the dream either, though they were married 12 years; he was just too well-manicured. But the supreme blow was yet to come. In the early Fifties Missy became estranged from her son Tony (she called him "Skipper"), the angel-faced child over whom she had once fought so furiously. Tony has stated that they have not spoken to each other since he went into the Army in 1952.

As far as The Queen is concerned, the details of this parting do not exist. She has "blotted them out," a close friend says. Another says: "She spent a fortune trying to set things right, but he had only contempt for her." At any rate, it was not the way the script was supposed to come out.

But then her life never really followed the script. Cinderella was always tripping over the glass slipper. The only thing a girl could really depend on was her work. And maybe—well, just maybe her "boys," those dear working stiffs. They didn't need a road map to know how a girl felt.

Here comes one of them now. A gaffer. Out come the wallet pictures. "Wife loves your show, Missy. I love your show. Kids love your show." The Queen smiles. "Every time I see one of your old pictures, Missy, I say to myself, there goes my girl. The Queen, the Greatest."

BRINGING IN

"Our biggest problem is the audio. You wouldn't think that in 1966, but it is. So we ordered that up two hours before the picture to be sure that the debaters could hear each other."

Executive producer Don Hewitt's worry proved unfounded, for there are few problems having to do with "bringing in the bird," the Early Bird, that is, that can't be taken care of by the spanking new equipment in CBS's new Broadcast

Center in New York. The occasion was that memorable Town Meeting of the World broadcast between London and New York two months ago, and the debaters heard one another very well indeed. You may remember, British Socialist M.P. Michael Foot and his Oxfordites blasted our Vietnam policy, and a spirited defense was put up by Prof. Henry Kissinger and his team of Harvard students.

'You don't give a desk a name because it has no Moving Parts'

Some sage and not-so-sage observations overheard at a 'Dick Van Dyke Show' rehearsal

Dick talks to Carl Reiner as Morey Amsterdam and Rose Marie listen in.

BY LESLIE RADDATZ

A week minus a day from now, the cavernous soundstage would be filled with the laughter of tourists and fans come to sit in bleacher seats for the filming of The Dick Van Dyke Show. But now there was just the laughter of the show's stars, the writers, the producer, the director and other functionaries, gathered for the read-through of next week's script. Only eight or 10 people sat in canvas-backed chairs around the long table center stage, but the laughter of the few was just as loud and enthusiastic as would be that of the many.

The writers, Bill Persky and Sam Denoff, were the first ones there on this particular Thursday morning. Then came the producer and super-writer, Carl Reiner. Then the co-star, Mary Tyler Moore. Then a few nameless assistants and the actors and actresses who would play bit parts (some are the old radio actors—Elvia Allman, who was Cobina with Bob Hope, and Forrest Lewis, who used to be in "One Man's Family"). Then came the star, Dick Van Dyke; finally director Jerry Paris, in Bermuda shorts.

Everyone was casual, except a man from the advertising agency, who wore a conservative business suit befitting his position. Van Dyke had on dirty white tennis shoes, sport shirt and slacks and, around his waist, a wide leather belt weighing 20 pounds. A few months ago, all the men in the group, except the agency man, wore these belts to try to get inches off their waists, but now everyone but Van Dyke had given them up for isometric exercises and the studio steam room. Co-star Rose Marie would be an hour late, and Morey Amsterdam, flying in from Las Vegas, where he was filling a night-club engagement, would not arrive until after lunch. The writers and Reiner and Paris were happy to read their lines.

But before the actual reading began, there were 15 minutes or so of conversation, the sort that comes easily to people who have worked closely together for five years:

DENOFF—Am I the only one here who thinks decorators cheat you?

REINER—My wife said why does your wife need a decorator—she has such good taste.

MOORE—Why didn't she ever say that to me?

VAN DYKE—I had to wash in another bathroom this morning because a decorator is tearing up the one I usually use.

DENOFF—Are you ever allowed to complain about a decorator?

VAN DYKE—They don't like it.

A little later, Van Dyke talked about the special program honoring Stan Laurel which he had just done. He was especially proud of the way he had taken a pie in the face at a climactic moment: "Nobody ever took a pie like that! I didn't flinch or close my eyes—but, boy, did my eyeballs ache!" To which Mary Tyler Moore, like a true wife, said, "You're either very dedicated or very stupid."

The meeting was ready to get down to business now, and the first order of business was an ancient and corny novel entitled "Don Marshall, Announcer," which had been found among some props onstage a few weeks before. It concerns the adventures of a young man breaking into radio, and five minutes of reading from it have become a hilarious tradition at the run-through. In fact, on this occasion "Don Marshall, Announcer" was so hilarious that Reiner had to sell the first real work of the day—a brief reading of the first draft of the script for two weeks later. "These are some of the funniest jokes we've ever had," he said. The program concerned a picture of the Liberty Bell, formed by tracing lines between the freckles on Rob Petrie's (Van Dyke's) back. The next script, which was the principal order of business of the meeting, concerned Rob's inheritance from an uncle, also played by Van Dyke, who died at 97, leaving a roll-top desk and a film clip in which Uncle Hezekiah gives clues to the treasure in the desk.

Finally the real business of the session began. Scenes involving the bit players were read first, so that they could leave. Director continued

Paris told the lawyer who was to read Uncle Hezekiah's will, "Play it sour—like you got acid." An actor came in late and was looking for a script. Rose Marie, who had arrived by then, said, "Your part is so small you don't need one—just pick up a spear." Mary Tyler Moore, doodling floral designs on the pages of her script, suggested additional joke lines for herself, but Reiner and the writers either did not hear her or chose not to. Rose Marie, who can always make herself heard, was more successful. Once, after she had suggested two or three new jokes for herself and was trying to decide which was best, Reiner said, "Let me be the judge—I'll turn 'em down." Rose Marie said, "Don't be my agent." Although Reiner's suggestions were usually made deferentially ("Would it be better if . . . ?"), he was always deferred to. When there was discussion of giving Uncle Hezekiah's desk a name, Reiner said, "You don't give a desk a name, because it has no moving parts. That's a law I just made up." During all the talk, there was much cross talk, and someone said, "I hope you'll forgive the asides." Reiner said, "The asides are why we are here."

Laughter louder after lunch

There were more asides than ever and the laughter was louder after lunch, when Morey Amsterdam, with three hours' sleep, arrived from Las Vegas. Most of the group had eaten lunch in the shabby studio commissary. Some of them, including Van Dyke, Mary Tyler Moore and Rose Marie, sat together at one big table, where the laughter continued, but Reiner spent the lunch break in the steam room. Afterward, one by one, they drifted back to the stage. There Van Dyke sat at a piano and began playing Bach variations. "He's never taken a lesson," said Mary Tyler Moore, envy fighting with admiration in her voice. A teen-age boy, who somehow had managed to get on the lot, came up behind Van Dyke, tapped him on the shoulder and said, "Hi, Dick, I was wondering if you could stop by my house when you get through here today." Van Dyke explained that he had another appointment later. The boy said, "Well, how about after that?" When Van Dyke told him that it would be too late, the boy said, "No, it wouldn't. You could stop by for just a minute." Van Dyke insisted that he couldn't, and then the boy said, "Okay, then how about tomorrow or the day after?" Finally someone took the boy by the arm and gently led him out. Van Dyke, unable to return to Bach, said, "What was I arguing with him for?" The meeting resumed.

Lengthy discussions could start over a word, a single joke or an entire sequence. One joke involved Uncle Hezekiah's smile and the fact that he had no teeth. This led to 10 minutes of jokes about teeth and their lack, but none of it got into the script. On the other hand, a sequence involving a coin dealer, which all agreed was too long, ended up a full page longer after being "edited." When this was called to Reiner's attention, he said, "We made it funnier—nobody'll notice now."

At 3:30, Mary Tyler Moore asked if she could leave for 20 minutes to pick up a Franklin stove she had ordered. Van Dyke said, "While you're out, get me a Garrard record changer with a diamond needle and the stylus-force adjustment toward the rear of the tone arm and the adjustable skating bias control." Rose Marie quickly said, "Get me some stamps—20 fives and one air mail." And Reiner added, "Get me a watch—any kind of a watch." After Mary Tyler Moore had gone, Rose Marie said, "Now give me all her lines."

FOR THE RECORD

The Hearings: NBC went all the way, CBS picked up four days' worth and ABC showed up for the last day. But, whatever channel you watched them on, the live telecasts of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's hearings provided some of the most rewarding, most effective, most important, presentations in the history of network television.

Unfriendly Parting: The reverberations from Fred Friendly's resignation from CBS are still being felt and will be for some time to come. In his 16 years at the network Friendly had become a towering figure in television news. On Feb. 15 he quit his job as president of the CBS News division after John Schneider, newly promoted No. 3 man in the CBS corporate hierarchy, turned down his request that the network telecast a specific session of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings on Vietnam. Friendly charged that the news department's autonomy was being subjected to "a form of emasculation." Richard Salant, who had moved upstairs when Friendly succeeded him two years ago, has again been placed in charge of the news operation, at least temporarily.

CATV and the FCC: The long-awaited and much-debated Federal Communications Commission decision on Community-Antenna Television came last week. As expected, the FCC assumed jurisdiction over all CATV systems (there are about 1600 of them, mostly in small towns) and placed a roadblock in the path of companies that want to bring CATV to the Nation's larger cities.

The Commission chose to leave some crucial questions unanswered, dropping them in Congress's lap. CATV entrepreneurs pick up and pipe into subscribers' homes (for a fee) programs originated by networks and stations. Should they be compelled to pay the originating stations, or at least get their permission, for the use of their programs? Should they be allowed to originate their own programs, a la pay-TV? And, most basic of all, does the FCC have the power to enforce these new CATV rules? The House Commerce Committee will review these questions and others; then the full Congress and the courts will have their say.

Busy Week: Meanwhile, during an unusually eventful off-screen week: Jackie Gleason changed his mind again. He'll be back next season after all, same time, same station, but in color and reunited with Art Carney and Audrey Meadows at least part of the time. . . . President Johnson hired a TV newsman—ABC's Robert Fleming—as deputy White House press secretary. . . . CBS paid the National Football League $4,000,000 for the privilege of telecasting the NFL championship game this year and next. The $2,000,000-a-game price is the highest ever for a one-day sports event. . . . Holy antibiotics! Batman was foiled by the flu. Adam West, who portrays ABC's caped crusader, was knocked out by a virus and landed in the hospital. "It just proves I'm not Superman," says West, who's back at work now.—Henry Harding.

WESTERN MUSIC LOVERS, ARISE!

I read in TV GUIDE that The Jimmy Dean Show is being replaced by the British import Court-Martial. If ABC wants to "revamp"—that's one thing, but taking off the only good Western-music show for more British stuff—c'mon!

Mrs. M. D. Perry
Buena Park, Cal.

If it takes letters to keep Jimmy Dean on the air, come on, country-music lovers!

Mrs. E. C. Benedict

GOOD NIGHT!

Good night, Chet. Good night, David. Good night, Walter. Good night, Peter. . . television is developing as many news personalities as there are cigaret trade-marks.

GREAT DAY

Oh for the day when there will be a fourth network for Presidential news, space flights, Senate investigations, etc.

REFUGEE CRITIC

Having read the article "American TV Behind the Iron Curtain" [TV GUIDE, Jan. 15] I feel compelled to comment. My family and I escaped from East Germany four years ago and since then have enjoyed freedom. However, we do not appreciate American TV. Your report told of the dullness of TV programs behind the iron curtain. This is true, but I wonder if American programs offer anything of value. Too many American TV programs appeal only to the lowest mentalities. I think such shows as Man from U.N.C.L.E., Batman and Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea are an insult.

Wolfgang Kayser
Rosedale, Ont.

MORE OF MOORE

"Garry Moore's People Poll" special was delightful, a refreshing new idea. Let's have more of Moore!

Rachel Doucetti
Hartford, Conn.

I watched the Garry Moore show. What else can he do?

T. J. Fitzpatrick

COMING UP

You are missing a good bet. Thought sure you'd have a profile on Dr. Smith of Lost in Space. My family agrees he is the funniest archvillain on TV.

Lee Biggs
Reno, Nev.

[TV GUIDE has an article on Jonathan Harris, who plays Dr. Smith, coming up soon.—Ed.]

Set on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains, the par-72, 6832-yard course is 6800 feet above sea level, an altitude where the air is thin—lengthening drives but shortening the breath. The course bears the stamp of its designer, Robert Trent Jones, one of the greatest golf-course architects. The tees are large, as are the undulating greens. The sweeping fairways are studded with strategically placed traps, and water hazards toughen approach shots.

The apparently ageless Snead has won a record 118 tournaments, including three Masters and three PGA championships. A member of the PGA Hall of Fame, Snead has taken the PGA Seniors and World Seniors events for the last two years, and last year also scored his traditional (and seventh) win in the "Nehru: Man of Two Worlds." Walter Cronkite narrates films and stills tracing the life and career of the late Jawaharlal Nehru, first Prime Minister of independent India. The program recounts his education in England, where he was influenced by Bertrand Russell and the Fabian Socialists; his close association with Gandhi and leadership of the Indian National Congress, the country's largest political party; and his years in prison for agitating for independence. After independence was achieved, Nehru had to contend with disunity and religious strife, keeping out of the cold war and improving the economic plight of his country. Film clips include a 1955 interview with Edward R. Murrow and Nehru's 1960 UN speech, urging the admittance of Communist China.

February has been designated Heart Month, and "Twentieth Century's" Man of the Month is a renowned cardiovascular surgeon: Dr. Michael Ellis De Bakey.

Cameras show De Bakey at Houston's Methodist Hospital . . . operating on an aneurysm, replacing the damaged arterial section with a dacron graft; in the intensive care unit, where he looks over his patients; talking with the parents of a teen-age girl, who are told that the operation on their daughter has been successful; and performing a heart-valve operation while a heart-lung machine keeps blood circulating through the patient's body.

Major accomplishments in De Bakey's career include his first successful aortic operation, 1951; an operation within inches of the heart, 1956; implanting of an artificial ventricle, 1963; and, in 1965, De Bakey's announcement that a calf had been kept alive for 30 hours with an artificial heart. "We could help many people if we had a truly workable artificial heart, and there is no really basic reason why we cannot," says the doctor.

Narrator: Walter Cronkite.

'TESTING: How Quick Is Your Eye?'

SPECIAL COLOR Mistaken, inaccurate and conflicting evidence supplied by eye witnesses is a common premise of scores of detective films and stories. In this second of four NBC audience-participation tests, writer-producer Craig Fisher shows some of the factors that influence and even distort our visual perception.

The audience will be offered a series of observation tests and dramatic vignettes which pose perception problems, and then have the opportunity to compare their scores with the scores made by special groups such as commercial pilots, taxi drivers and scientists.

Fisher plans to explore the mechanics of vision and hearing, and the effects of selectivity—how our physical and emotional condition, background, training and prejudices influence what we see and what we retain. Also: a demonstration of illusions, such as magicians use, designed to deceive the senses.

Flowers used more explosives than in any previous "Combat!" story (more than in most war movies). Hanley: Rick Jason. Kirby: Jack Hogan. Cajé: Pierre Jalbert. Littlejohn: Dick Peabody. UNCIVILIZED AND UNCIVILIZING

Despite TV's virtues and triumphs, a noted critic contends that there has been nothing too elegant for it to coarsen or too sacred for it to profane

BY LOUIS KRONENBERGER

In approaching the theme of this series—the effects of television on our civilization—what I think must be said first is that television is not just a great new force in modern continued

The author of this article, the second in TV Guide's series assessing television's effect on our society, is a teacher (Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, Stanford, Oxford, who is currently Professor of Theatre Arts at Brandeis), writer (novels, essays) and critic (Time magazine's drama critic, 1938-61).

life, but that it virtually is modern life. What, one might ask, doesn't it do? It gives us—be we rich, poor, snow-bound, bedridden or slow-witted—the time, the weather, the small news, big news, spot news: now in spoken headlines, now in pictured narrative, now at the very scene of the crime or the coronation itself. It plays, sings, whistles and dances for us; takes us to movies and theaters, concerts and operas, prize fights and ball games, ski jumps and tennis tournaments. It delivers babies, probes adolescents, psychoanalyzes adults. It dramatizes floods, fires, earthquakes; takes you to the top of an alp or the bottom of an ocean or whirling through space; lets you see a tiger killed or a tiger kill. It becomes a hustings or a house of worship; guesses your age, your weight, your job, your secret; guides you through prisons, orphan asylums, lunatic asylums; introduces you to Presidents, kings, emirs, sultans; lets you see a Winston Churchill buried or a Lee Oswald shot. It teaches you French, rope-dancing, bird calls and first aid; provides debates and seminars and symposiums, quizzes and contests; and it tells you jokes, gags, wheezes, wisecracks, jokes and jokes.

A truly stupendous addition

Television is thus a truly stupendous addition to American life—our supreme cultural opportunity. Nothing approaches it, either in the abundance, variety and immediacy of its offerings, or the vastness, heterogeneity and attendance-record of its audiences. It offers a mammoth handout of news, fun, art, sport, information; or of free refrigerators, cars, cruises, honeymoons, second honeymoons—all yours just for turning a knob, writing a letter, answering a phone.

Not too unnaturally, along with the handout there goes a sales talk. For this colossal addition of ours to American life, this supreme cultural opportunity, is also a tremendous segment of American business and our supreme cultural commodity. And not too surprisingly, what with Business paying the piper, Business calls—or cuts short, or calls off—the tune. And since television is Big Business operating with the help of Bigger Business, the two together constitute a form of Biggest Business—a fact we must face, since it makes any other fact about TV and its effect upon our civilization ultimately subsidiary and expendable.

Fresh insights are difficult

It also tends to make any fresh insights and observations about the effect of TV on our civilization hard to come by. Before we can have any really new thoughts, TV must itself give proof of really new thinking; before we can find anything notably different to say, television must provide something notably different to say it about. To be sure, there are constantly new craft gadgets, seasonal fashions, technological wrinkles—and there is color television with its promise of greater audience pleasure and fiercer network rivalry. But though these are things that add considerably to our conversation, they add very little to our culture. In providing so vast a menu, television has also—barring lavish Christmas puddings and special treats—pretty much standardized the food, the preparation of it, and the after-dinner speeches as well.

A fair amount on the menu is unexceptionable; and a good deal more has given 100,000,000 people harmless enjoyment. A certain amount of TV is clearly good; a certain further amount—notably in Space-Age matters—is both good and unprecedented. But very much else is not good, and much beyond that is truly dreadful. Moreover, beyond what television has done, good or bad, there is the matter of just how television has done it. The particular nature of what is bad in what TV does, the particular nature of what is bad in the way it does it, indicate what seems to me the out-standing effect of TV upon our civilization—which is that it has made it less civilized. There is a decided exception to this, namely educational television; but educational television, for all the charity and technical help it receives from commercial broadcasting, exists in a condition of virtual poverty, which not only underlines the uncivilized effect elsewhere, it argues no very civilizing intentions.

Let us gauge the effect

Let us gauge the effect in various ways. The programs themselves are predominantly geared to mediocre tastes and mass reactions—and geared, it would seem, in the hope that neither tastes nor reactions will improve. This doesn't just mean the proportion of sport to art on TV, or of broad comedy to adult humor; it means, even more, the proportion of trite formula to honest experiment, of glib comment to grown-up thinking. Further, the subject-matter of countless programs—sex, gossip, violence, material success, cash itself—is uncivilized and uncivilizing both.

Take the most notorious example. The technical crime of the big-money quizzes was their being rigged; the technical immorality, that the networks could hardly not know it. But what was really degrading, indecent, uncivilizing was that, rigged or not, the quizzes pandered to the venality of a whole nation, had multitudes glued to their televisions not at all for the fun of the game, but for the size of the stakes. Knowledge had become the grossest, the most uncivilized, of commodities. (One can't help wondering whether, if tomorrow playing Russian roulette for huge stakes on TV was declared legal, it too wouldn't become the rage, with wildly mounting remuneration.)

Again, what is more uncivilizing, in fact brutalizing, than all the violence that is offered on TV for sensational and not sociological reasons? What could be less civilized than the endless cheap gags and gossip continued wisecracks; what less civilized than TV's flagrant invasion of privacy—not just in terms of outright gossip, but in the way of candid "discussion," or psychiatric "discovery," or photographs of the sick, the unhappy, the doomed? And when the networks do attempt a civilized subject (such as Michelangelo) all too often the treatment makes civilized people squirm.

The presentation of the programs is worse, and far more uniform. Whatever the pros and cons for commercial television generally, there can be no argument about how uncivilized, how rife with crudities, timidities, imbecilities, sponsored programs tend to be. The stop-watch technique alone must make a sensitive viewer stop watching. "Men," as Tyrone Guthrie has put it, "stand chalk-white . . . on guard in the studio, charged with the single responsibility of seeing that 'Othello' or Beethoven's 'Eroica' does not run one-tenth of a second over, or under." If the esthetic distortions resulting from this are often appalling, the grotesque and vulgar intrusions and interpolations—the commercials—are worse. There are, to be sure, exceptions; but for the most part the blatancy of the programs' commercialized approach conveys the impression of a cash register in the drawing room, and even right next to a deathbed.

Not merit but mass popularity

As with programs and presentation, so with procedure. The "ratings" system, which computes not merit but mass popularity, which queries not those best qualified to judge but those most apt to judge routinely, is more than uncivilized: It is anticivilized. It turns any illiterate into a critic; an entrepreneur into a craven; a defeated contestant into a criminal (punishable by instant banishment). For profits-seeker and pleasure-seeker alike, there might be point to conducting polls with a view to correcting faults; but here improved quality is no more the issue than intrinsic quality.

Cutthroat tensions

Moreover, the general off-screen atmosphere of TV proclaims the lack of accident in how uncivilized the thing as a whole is. Everywhere cutthroat tensions seem mated with backstabbing tactics. The higher levels of the three great networks suggest a luxury-class Reign of Terror, where the people who live in glass doghouses and the limelighted shake-ups and feuds make TV's administrative life the gossip column's darling. TV doesn't even wash its dirty linen in public; it merely waves it. Perhaps the one sure news edge that the press still enjoys over television is the doings and misdoings, the firings and backfirings, of television itself. But though the power side of TV is always agitated and shifting, its money side is solid and stationary. In this, the Great Networks are splendidly assisted by the Great Advertising Agencies and the Great Artists' Representatives, so that the alluring daughters and nieces of art—Language and Laughter, Melody and Declamation and Dancing —are constantly bedded and wedded to the paunchy sons and nephews of Mammon. The general effect is often about as civilized as gluttony.

There is, finally, the cultural irresponsibility involved in all this. In an empire so vast as television's, in a network hierarchy so unfixed and collapsible, we must look to the very top for the policies that govern it and for the direction it takes. And there we find men known only for their immense wealth and their business power. Whatever their private enjoyments or hobbies, these are not men publicly identified with high culture; indeed, they have made everything in television that is so identified, everything that bespeaks artistic experiment, genuine enlightenment, pretty much shift for itself. Where important cultural events are not news already, these men seem to show small interest in making them so.

ETV just a sop

As for educational television, for these men it seems enough to give it a pat on the back and gestures of financial aid. Thus educational television remains a kind of sop that under the present system will never become a sufficient offset. Nor does it constitute a sufficient offset to the bill of complaint raised in this article.

Without at all belittling TV's virtues, its triumphs of news coverage, its operas and concerts, its ability to inform or stimulate or amuse, its serviceability to the many millions of people who use it as a food and not a drug, the glaring fact remains that TV has consistently either imposed uncivilized elements on American life, or aggravated and intensified those it found there. It has helped destroy respect for privacy, it has helped foster a more racketsy publicity. There has been nothing too elegant for it to coarsen, too artistic for it to vulgarize, too sacred for it to profane.

MOVE OVER, LAURENCE OLIVIER

Dick Kallman (he's that fellow in 'Hank') expects someday he'll be just as famous

BY MICHAEL FESSIER JR.

A lot of people don't like Dick Kallman, specifically those bruised as he rushed by on his way up.

And this depresses the star of NBC's comedy Hank, because being liked is important to him.

But if it came down to an either-or choice of being liked and being successful, Kallman most certainly would choose the latter every time; because like Finch—the charming but rapacious rogue he played in the national company of “How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying”—and to a lesser extent Hank, a sort of minor-league Finch, success to Dick Kallman is just about everything.

But far from being embarrassed by any superficial resemblance to Finch, who took the advertising business tidily, Kallman says, “I identify with him 150 percent.

“I want to be the best,” he adds earnestly. “I want to walk down the street and have people say, ‘There goes Dick Kallman,’ not just because they recognize me but because they feel about me as a comedian the way I feel when I see Laurence Olivier.”

Laurence Olivier?! Pursuit of this lofty ambition takes Kallman ripping through each day as if it were his last. “It’s like somebody winds him up in the morning,” says his co-star Linda Foster wearily.

Primary outlet for all this nervous energy is, of course, Hank, a show said to be based loosely on the experiences of creator-producer Hugh Benson, who navigated three years at the University of Southern California as an unregistered student. Kallman was picked for the role after Benson and Warner Brothers television chief Bill Orr flew to Chicago to catch him in “How to Succeed.”

As the man shouldering a large part of the responsibility for the show’s success—or lack of it—Dick works harder and is more demanding of himself than perhaps any actor in town. “I get so damned mad at myself,” he grimaces. “It’s like self-flagellation.” And it’s a burden not always borne alone. “Dick’s need for constant reassurance sometimes gets oppressive,” allows former associate producer Bill D’Angelo.

Kallman fairly burns with the knowledge that as Hank goes (and it hasn’t been doing well), quite possibly goes Dick Kallman. And protocol be damned, he will champion the show in any quarter no matter its eminence. Like the many cajoling calls he made to NBC programming V.P. Mort Werner asking him to keep the show on the air (though it seems now they were to no avail. The show is out of production, and its return next season is doubtful—ED).

And with all things at all times there is the aggressively ingratiating Kallman manner.

He is in the commissary, and that dapper little guy with the sharp features and the great tan on his bald head coming toward the table is director Sidney Miller. “In the whole world my favorite,” burbles Kallman. “I’ll say it right in front of him, Sidney Miller is the most marvelous director—and I mean that from the bottom of my heart.” They embrace affectionately and Miller says, “Dick is a beautiful man to work with.”

Miller says he’s going to New York for a few days and Dick pleads, “Come back, will ya?,” as if Miller were off for a four-year hitch in a Tunisian tungsten mine.

In truth Kallman is pretty happy with just about everybody in sight. He says that Bill Orr, the man with whom Jim Garner and nearly all the rest of the Warners stable fought for so many years, is “the nicest guy I ever met,” and has similar superlatives for everyone from Benson to makeup man Sam Kaplan.

He is a whiz at charming influential folk. On the set he had an aide get Los Angeles Times writer Aleene MacMinn on the phone for him. “It was so beautifully written,” enthused Kallman about his latest press notice authored by Miss MacMinn. “And you can’t imagine what good it’s done since Sunday...”

In Denver with “How to Succeed” he let slip to Japanese columnist Larry Tajiri how much he liked Japanese food, and told continued the Denver Catholic Register how much good Catholic critics had done him. He is pals with Chicago's Irv Kupcinec. A friend of a friend, Kupcinec was asked to "look after" Kallman when he hit town in the show, but, comments the columnist, "Dick really didn't need much help."

While in Chicago Kallman organized a madcap group called the Young Socialites and got himself named Bachelor of the Year. At various times he showed up in the society pages on the arms of roommates Joanne Field (of the Marshall Fields) and Abra Rockefeller Prentice. If he can work the names of such acquaintances as Lord Harrison Hughes and Sir Joseph Lockwood into the conversation, so much the better. And it is difficult for him to mention a moneyed friend without indicating his bank balance. The people he met last summer weren't only fine folk: "They have more money than the Almighty."

Father was a millionaire

Such a consuming drive upward deserves careful scrutiny. His father, Alvan Kallman, had next to nothing when he married Dick's mother, the actress-daughter of a wealthy Boston businessman; but eventually made millions with a chain of five hotels, all of which he had lost by the time he died two years ago. Dick was extremely close to his father, as he is with his mother today. He feels his father's supernatural presence has been responsible for his career's turn for the better. "He's here as sure as you're sitting there," he says.

Kallman, glibly as if reciting a favorite bromide, explains his ambition this way: "I have a terrible need for security because of what happened to my father." The real answer, however, might possibly lie with the black loafer shoes which belonged to his father and which he wears constantly with obvious and perhaps significant symbolic implications.

Dick and his brother Charles, now a New York engineer, grew up living between a huge family-owned summer resort in New Hampshire and a 29-room palatial estate in Miami. Since childhood Dick has been theatrically bent and he left Tilton prep school in New Hampshire for a try at Broadway. He had won a part in the musical version of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen" before his 17th birthday. Since then he has acted in movies and TV, been on the night-club circuit with Sophie Tucker as a singing protégé, made records and movies abroad.

Packed off to New York

It's been a career of fits and starts, however, sputtering to its lowest ebb in 1962 when his mother tired of his moping about the house in Los Angeles and packed him off to stay with a family friend in New York—Father Albert De Bois, an Episcopalian priest. (Dick's father was Jewish, and he and his mother are Episcopalians.)

A year or so later he persisted through eight auditions to get the role in "How to Succeed." The uncanny rapport he felt with the character he was playing hit its peak when the show reached Los Angeles:

"It was the biggest moment of my life. I almost broke up. I got out there in the middle of the second act and I knew I was in—you can tell. And I started to sing 'I Believe in You' (into a mirror): 'Now, there you are, yes, there's that face; that face that somehow I trust. . . . You have the cool clear eyes of a seeker of wisdom and truth, . . . and when my faith in my fellow man all but falls apart I've but to feel your hand grasping mine. . . .' Every word matched my life and I looked out into the audience and all of a sudden—and this will sound like Peyton Place—but all of a sudden my life in the business flashed before me and I realized—I did believe in me.”

Kallman's belief in his own manifest destiny has not always endeared him to others, particularly the competition. Among the disenchanted are Janice Carroll, Roger Perry and Nick Georgiade—three compatriots from the old days at Lucille Ball's short-lived young-talent hatchery, the Desilu Workshop:

ROGER—You're trying to swim but feel yourself sinking and he's the one with his hand on your head.

NICK—He's the kind of guy I wouldn't want to have in my platoon.

“There were times,” acknowledges Dick, “when I wasn't too popular with my fellow actors because I didn't like goofing off. Maybe I was unkind. I'm fairly transparent in my likes and dislikes.” He added later, “I haven't many friends from the early days for a good reason; I can't tell you how many times I've run into one of them and they've said, through clenched teeth [Dick is clenching his teeth], how happy they are for my success.”

Pushy in two directions

A positive word from the old days comes from songwriter Portia Nelson, with whom Dick collaborated on a stillborn revue. “Dick is as pushy for you as he is for himself,” she insists. “He has always been very generous toward me.”

All of his contemporary workmates have kind things to say about him, from Orr to Benson to Linda Foster. And, aside from that “oppressive” need for reassurance, Bill D'Angelo speaks fondly of Kallman. Bill especially appreciates Dick's apparent willingness to stick to performing and leave the writing, directing, etc. to others, an attribute he has found uncommon among actors.

A few months ago Dick installed himself in an expensive West Hollywood studio apartment. The eye first takes in a ceiling-high rubber-tree plant against a background of austere whites and 18th-century furniture, and vases on little Grecian columns. His walls are decorated with an original Leroy Neiman, a Paul Jasmin, a Degas pencil sketch, a signed Renoir litho, and so on—nice, tasteful, rather conservative things hung at symmetrically unapproachable angles.

No gum wrappers on the floor

Nowhere is there an item extraneous to the desired effect. The day you find as much as a gum wrapper on the floor is the day you find dapper Dick in a torn T-shirt.

Kallman finds life generally pleasing at the moment: “I am very happy. I love my home, I'm very close to my mother, I have some good friends, really good. And I have a great cook.”

His hobby is dabbling in the stock market. His latest addition to an already healthy portfolio was a share or two of Warner Brothers preferred.

Even Finch wouldn't have thought of that.

Lost Boy on a Bike

Put yourself in Pedro's place: You're 8 years old and lost in a strange, dark city. You have 15¢ in your pocket and about 15 English words in your head. What would you do?

Pedro Rodriguez is a resourceful 8-year-old who lives in New York City.

Last spring, Pedro went to spend his Easter vacation with relatives in Boonton, New Jersey. A few days later, he grew homesick, so he slipped away on the bicycle he'd brought with him and started for New York.

After seven long hours of pedaling through strange streets and towns, he realized he was hopelessly lost. It was ten o'clock at night and he had only 15¢ in his pocket.

Through the darkness, Pedro saw the friendly light of a phone booth, dropped his lone dime in the slot and dialed "Operator." Mrs. Anna Appleton, Night Chief Operator in Bloomfield, N. J., answered his call.

Pedro knew few English words and Mrs. Appleton couldn't understand his frantic Spanish. But her calm voice reassured the boy and she held him on the line while she enlisted the help of a Spanish-speaking student at a nearby college. Patiently, they pieced together Pedro's story.

But how do you find a boy in a booth who has no idea where he is? Mrs. Appleton knew only that the call must be coming from one of five adjacent communities. In quick succession, she called the police in each town and asked them to check.

The Fairfield police found Pedro in a booth only a block from their headquarters. His mother came to get him and the story had a happy ending—thanks to a boy who knew enough to dial and an operator who lived up to the Bell System's long tradition of helpfulness.

Have you trained your children to dial 'O for Operator' in case of emergency?
